

Sometimes the value of AI is not in answering the question — it's in reframing it.

- Second-lens mode injects strategic imagination, surfacing what's not being asked, but maybe should be.
- Solution mode respects the executive's framing, and focuses on executional velocity.

This is a tension between frame disruption and frame precision.

The former is better when the user is still exploring what to even want. The latter is sharper when they already know where they want to go, they just need the terrain mapped.
