

Markets don't make decisions, people do. And what guides them often isn't just data, but desire.

- Self-reflective AI invites foundational clarity, helping leaders anchor strategy in purpose.
- External-facing AI prioritizes signal detection, keeping attention on what the world is doing — and what works.

This is a tension between values-first alignment and data-first adaptation.

The former is essential when the stakes are identity-shaping. The latter is vital when agility and responsiveness matter most.
