Prioritize Strategic Courage over Strategic Certainty

Data gives us confidence. Frameworks give us structure. But real strategy often requires action before the data is conclusive. We argue that most tools, even AI, tend to reinforce the executive preference for certainty. What's missing is an intelligent prompt toward courage.

This is not about being reckless. It's about recognizing 'when' the pursuit of more validation is simply masking a reluctance to commit and then designing tools that help break that loop.
